

Tim Lee 3 Releases Fourth Studio Album, 33 1/3, on Musical Anniversary

In the summer of 2014, as Tim Lee 3 closed in on finishing up their fourth full-length album, the Knoxville, Tennessee, combo faced the tough questions every artist faces when preparing a new release. Chief among those concerns were the obvious: what do you call it and when do you release it?

In the case of the upcoming TL3 record, those two queries were handled with a single answer: 33.1/3.

After doing a little math (very little math), they figured out that bassist/singer/songwriter Susan Bauer Lee and guitarist/singer/songwriter Tim Lee will celebrate their 33-1/3 wedding anniversary on March 6, 2015 (drummer Chris Bratta's relationship status was left out so as to not confuse the issue for the mathematically-challenged group). Vinyl albums also play at 33-1/3 RPM, which tied those two elements up into one nice little bundle.

Thus, Tim Lee 3's album, 33.1/3, is slated for release on March 6, 2015, Tim and Susan's 33-1/3 anniversary.

Cool, huh?

For 33.1/3 the band again trekked to Tucson, Arizona's Wavelab Studios to work with long-time collaborators Chris Schultz and Craig Schumacher (Neko Case, Caexico, KT Tunstall). As with its previous releases, the TL3 continued to expand its boundaries, production-wise, without losing any of its trademark "three chords and a cloud of dust" rock n' roll fire. The results of the sessions yielded 11 songs that cover a lot of territory, from the hard-rocking opener, "Baby Caught Fire," to the ringing power pop of "Photo Booth," through the energetic cowpunk of "Daddy's Girl" (which gets a Sir Doug-inspired Tex-Mex treatment) and "(Let's Do) Something Stupid," to the bluesy rock of "Shut Up and Kiss Me," and the psychedelic roadscapes explored on songs such as "Where Things Get Lost," "Our Lady of the Highway," and "Magnolia Plates."

Throw in a few signature TL3 rockers, and 33.1/3 adds up to a wide-ranging, yet cohesive, unit.
